

Covid, Brexit and The Anglosphere

Our world is dominated by “sound bite” solutions to challenging problems. As complexity overwhelms, events unveil dead ends rather than open doors, political focus shifts to appeasing populist movements, often wrapped within a narrative of divisive nationalism.

Covid, Brexit and The Anglosphere focuses on economic development within today’s Post Covid, Brexit and Trump MAGA fragmenting world. The book seeks to unpack the complex interactions between the economic and social, to equip the reader to embrace the underlying proposals and associated theories, so enabling evaluation and critique of the offered solutions. Set in a context of perceived exceptionalism where failure risks shifting constructive Patriotism into acrimonious Nationalism, the book proposes a framework to drive economic progress that uses Brexit and underlying economic concerns behind MAGA as a spur to re-establish Entrepreneurial Capitalism.

Entrepreneurial Capitalism as opposed to Financial, State or Crony Capitalism focuses on furnishing Entrepreneurs and Entrepreneurial Organisations to both develop and grow existing business and innovate new “Big Bang Disrupting” products to build future global market leaders. Main Street over Wall Street, driving innovators to deliver the “Brexit Dividend” and support re-invigorating America’s global role. The book combines historical lessons with economic theory to transform simplistic soundbites into two frameworks that balance both complexity and uncertainty within today’s fragmenting world. First there is an updated version of “Cumulative Causation” and secondly a new “Quadruple Innovation Vortex”, both driving a “bi-partisan” approach to yield economic renewal.

Trade theory, laissez faire, dirigisme, innovation and tension between the financial and real economies are de-mystified and synthesised pragmatically into a way forward that recognises uncertainty and global fragmentation. The book concludes by forming a view how nationalistic desires for an “Anglosphere” can be harnessed positively to re-establish global certainty.
